John Randolph, of Virginia, on the Retrenchment Resolutions: Delivered in the House of Representatives of the United States, February 1, 1828 I have been replied to by various gentlemen (some of whom I have not the honor to know by person) on different sides of the House, in a manner which I do not doubt was perfectly satisfactory at least to the speakers themselves. I certainly do not wish to disturb their self complacency, de minimis non carat, whether of persons or of things. The gentleman from Ohio, [mn Vance] with that blunt plainness and candor which, I am told, belong to him, and which I admire in proportion as they are rare qualities in these days - I like him the better for his surly honestv - I hope he will take no offence at the term, for I can assure him that none is intended - charged me, in my absence, (so my friends have informed me, ) with what I believe he would not hesitate to have charged to my face, and to which I have no objection, except to the authority on which he relied but I protest against any gentleman s producing, as proof of what I have, at any time, said, a newspaper, or any thing purporting to be a Register of Debates, unless I endorse it, and more particularly remarks drawn from the debates of another body, which, in regard to me, are partien larly unfaithful. I shall show to the house, not such matter as the gentleman from Massachusetts stirred, to the injury of every moral sense, of every moral being. I shall refer to a...
